Fuel's Egg Florentine

Any gas station can throw together an egg salad sandwich. But if the gas station is painted Easter-egg purple, stocked with its own brand of wine and bankrolled by Patricia Kluge, well—that egg salad sandwich better be damn good.

At Fuel you don't get egg salad. You get "The Egg Florentine." The egg salad is tastefully dressed in spinach and Parmesan, and the chickens that laid the eggs all hold college degrees. They do fine work. The $5 price tag is on par with the steep but delicious fare at this combination filling station/haute café.
